Assistant Teaching Professor - Dept. of Media, Art and Design in Kansas City, Missouri

Job Duties: Teach in our hands-on media production curriculum, covering cinematography, lighting, sound recording, and editing within introductory and intermediate project-based courses. Teach a basic video and audio production course for undergraduate students studying digital and public humanities. The teaching load is four courses per semester. Support students in the Media, Art and Design department as well as students working in the digital and public humanities as they develop projects and conduct original research that integrates digital methods with creative work and scholarship. This is a 9-month academic year, full-time, ranked non-tenure track faculty position to begin with Fall semester 2023. There is opportunity for ranked promotion.

Minimum Requirements: Master of Fine Arts (MFA) or other terminal degree in Film Directing or a related field. We seek candidates with experience making independent shorts, features, animation, or media art with sufficient knowledge of both narrative and documentary production methods for teaching these topics at the undergraduate intermediate level.

Must have proof of legal authority to work in the United States.
